Bird rescue blairstown nj

Tony Kurdzuk/The Star-Ledger Jeanne Gilligan, who directs Saving a Parrot Helping The Parrot Wing, with a Mullikan Cockatoo named Boomer (left) and a blue fronted Amazon parrot named Rocky. BLAIRSTOWN - Jeannie Gilligan has no such thing as a normal parrot. Each of her feathered friends - and she has more than 150 of them - has her own distinctive attributes: Some are great talkatives, while others tend to hold on to themselves; some are sexist, they prefer to be in the company of men rather than women or vice versa; and yet others would just like to stay alone. Each of them has their own personality. Each bird is like a 5-year-old child. It's obvious when a bird loves someone and you can also tell if a bird doesn't like a human. It's very obvious, Gilligan said. Pointing to a white moluccan cockatoo with a salmon crest, Gilligan said with a laugh: And he doesn't like me. The bird squats as it is held by her neighbor Brian Bailey, who helps Jeannie and her husband, John, run Help Wing Parrot Rescue from a converted garage at Gilligan's home on a 25-acre farm in Blairstown, Warren County. Parrots are smarter than the average dog. Just because you feed them and love them doesn't mean they'll love you back,' said Karen Windsor, executive director of Foster Parrots Ltd., a nonprofit group that runs the Exotic Wildlife Sanctuary of New England in Hope Valley, R.I. In fact, they can define you to be a rival or they just can't like how you smell or color your hair. They can be aggressive, territorial, extremely loud and relentless in their pursuit of attention, she said. Tony Kurdzuk/The Star-Ledger Toby, a blue-green macaque owned by Jeannie Gilligan on helping rescue the parrot's wing. Toby came from a house that had seven children and ripped feathers so bad that they were unlikely to grow back. The Gilligans founded Helping Wing, a nonprofit center for the rescue and adoption of parrots and other exotic birds, in Hopewell Junction, N.Y., in 2008 after Jeannie Gilligan lost her job as an accountant. They moved to Blairstown in August. Today they have about 80 parrots ready for adoption. Some are rehabilitated, while others are older bird sanctuaries. More are part of Gilligan's personal collection of 25 parrots, which she keeps in two rooms in her newly renovated home. The couple also has a smaller collection of parakeets and sputum. The price of taking parrot ranges from $250 to $600, depending on the size of the bird. The cost is much lower than the price of parrots sold in pet stores, which can sometimes charge up to $2,500 for a particular species, Gilligan said. Our price covers checking (veterinary care), food and housing. It barely covers the cost, Bailey said. Most importantly, Gilligan wants brightly colored birds to go to good homes, noting that many have come to the wing's aid as a result of people who have done what she describes as spontaneous - without realizing the commitment that entails. To ensure that the Birds get good homes, help wing requires potential owners to meet birds several times before taking one home. Adoption as gifts for another person is prohibited. Tony Kurdzuk/The Star-Ledger Bryan Bailey, a volunteer with the help of saving the parrot's wing, hugs an affectionate mulikan cockatoo named Boomer. Parrots form strong thoughts about their people. It's important not to send a parrot home with someone the parrot doesn't like because this adoption would be a meant to fail, Windsor said. And parrots are very opinionated. Prospective owners must also agree to periodic inspections of the house, helping the wing after adoption, and they must also agree to return the bird for free if they can no longer keep it. First impressions mean a lot to me. If someone tells me they want a bird that speaks - it's not someone I'm going to work with. They will receive the bird for the wrong reasons. There's so much more to it than that. All birds have the ability to speak; it's up to them if they want to, Gilligan said. Interactions between a potential owner and a bird during the pre-adoption process are key, she said. We like the bird to pick you up. Our mission (and passion) is to help get homeless pets out of shelters and into loving homes. Let us know what you think! Special thanks to our sponsors, Purina, Chewy and PetBasics, whose support makes our lifesaving work possible. For the love of birds there is a rescue bird operating in New Jersey and Philadelphia solely for the charitable and educational purposes of companion birds through rescue, care and accommodation. We are a healthy varied diet and many toys until a suitable and loving new home is found. Each bird is an individual and is encouraged at its own pace to develop a sense of security, confidence and positive engagement with people and develop the skills to succeed in their next home. Every bird in our care will be seen as a person and work to improve your diet, health, security, joy, confidence and positive interaction with people. We will work with the bird to build trust, activate their search system and develop the skills to succeed in their next home. We do not send since we think it's very stressful for them.
